

NEW-YORK TRIBUNE.

MUSINGS.—For the Tribune.

While we see our hopes depart,
While we find one faithful heart:

Let us fondly to it cling;

Deeming it a sacred thing;

Still, within the inmost mind,

Let the jewel be enshrin'd!

For the joys that all may know,

Cannot o'er my pathway flow;

Those that from affection spring;

Those that poorest blessings bring,

Joy's that though death can part,

Live forever in my heart?

I have wept when others smiled—
Wept, and thought how beguiled:

I have seen each vision bright

Vanish like a cloud of night—

Then, wit ask, when these shall part.

Why a sigh is in my heart?

I have felt a chest'ning power

O'er me steal in some lone hour:

And my spirit, all subdued:

Would not to earth's charms be woed;

Those that blow these must all depart.

Still there's love within the heart!

LUCIA.

TORNADO AT CORNWALL, U. S.—We find in the Montreal Courier a detailed account of the tornado at Cornwall. It appears to have been really terrible. The clouds were dense, black and suddenly started moving toward the earth, while the winds were intense, eleven hours after the sun had risen, and many others passed.

The shrill and fierce sounds from a canon's mouth.

The air was hot, the thunder and lightning appalling, and the rain came down in torrents. Houses and stables were blown down and scattered, and fences broken, with a noise and a roar, and were ranging about dislocated, scattering dust and alarm.

At a near Massena Point, two miles above, the water of the St. Lawrence was caught up like what are called water-spirits. There were three houses, one eight hundred feet apart, which were rent asunder, eleven houses blown down, thirteen ruined, and many others passed.

The shrill and fierce sounds from a canon's mouth.

The tornado approached the village of the St. Lawrence again at Lorraine village, where several buildings were destroyed, and a woman and child who were in a house were buried under the ruins.

A young man, who had just recovered from a severe attack of rheumatism, was buried under the ruins.
